

DEAR GAVIN

(Author's Message)

"Dear Gavin" was originally written with the sole intent of leaving my son a factual and private account of the circumstances and events leading up to his conception and our life together after his birth. As my story developed, others I trusted and confided in strongly suggested that Dear Gavin needed to be heard by a much larger audience than I first intended. Hesitant at first and after much prayerful consideration, I have now made my story public. Out of respect and to guard the privacy of those directly involved, I have changed certain names and their descriptions.

People often ask me, "What is it like being a single father?" My standard reply is, "It's the most wonderful and frustrating thing I have ever done, but I can't imagine not being Gavin's daddy." Although there is a growing number of dedicated dads willing to take on the role of solo parenting, there are still countless men in society who should never be fathers. Sadly, many women should never be mothers. I pray that "Dear Gavin" will bring greater awareness to those committed single parents who often face overwhelming odds in providing a safe and loving environment for their children. I applaud each of you; our kids are worth the sacrifice!
